

How Much Time?

The park is 3.4 million acres. Most people just drop in on their way between L.A. and Las Vegas. Unless it's summer, that's a huge mistake. With that said, if you don't have a 4x4 and/or aren't interested in hiking, you won't need that much time. With a 4x4 and plenty of money for fuel, you could spend weeks here and not get sick of it.

At a minimum, spend one night to enjoy sunrise/sunset at Mesquite Flat Sand Dunes, and check out some of the highlights. There are quite a few overnight accommodations in the park and unlike most parks, camping is mostly first-come, first served (and usually available).

Need to Know

- Elevation varies from 282 feet below sea level to 11,049 feet. In summer, it can be over 100°F on the valley floor and in the 70s°F at the summit of Telescope Peak. Come prepared for varied weather, and be sure to acclimate to elevation.
- Gas, food, and water are available at Panamint Springs, Stovepipe Wells, and Furnace Creek.
- Superblooms depend on winter rain. If you're hoping for flowers, check with the park about status.

Road Trip

Here's a Google Map to help plan road trips from the east (Las Vegas, NV), north (middle of nowhere, NV), west (Yosemite), and south (Joshua Tree). It's a good start, but I'd highly recommend making your own.

There's much more to our country. Here's another Google Map with points of interest across all types of public land.

For campers, here's a Google Map with National Forest campgrounds. National Park campgrounds are difficult to reserve (there are about 200!). With nearly 5,000 national forest campgrounds, you can usually pull in and find a spot.
